UM SCHEDULES INTERVIEWS WITH FINALISTS FOR MANSFIELD CENTER FACULTY POSITION

MISSOULA—

The University of Montana has scheduled interviews with three finalists for the position of professor of modern Asian affairs in the Maureen and Mike Mansfield Center at UM. The candidates and the dates of their campus visits:

April 24, 25, 26--Winberg Chai, chairman, Third World Conference Foundation, Inc., and faculty associate, Columbia University. He received a Ph.D. in Asian politics and foreign policy from New York University in 1968.

May 1, 2, 3--Benedict Stavis, assistant professor of political science, University of Northern Iowa. Columbia University awarded him a Ph.D. in comparative politics in 1973.

May 8, 9, 10--Raymond Wylie, associate professor of international relations and director of the East Asian Studies Program, Lehigh University. He took a Ph.D. in Chinese politics at London University in 1976.

Each candidate will give a public lecture on modern Asian affairs. Following the lecture there will be an open meeting with the candidate for UM students, faculty and administrators and the general public. Each lecture will be on a Wednesday at 7 p.m. in Room 307 of the Botany Building.

The position is one of two on the center faculty that UM hopes to fill before fall quarter begins, according to James Lopach, who is coordinating recruitment. Lopach, a UM political science professor, was named acting director in September 1984 to oversee the center's start-up year.
